

Kevin Cresswell runs the Los Angeles office of Field Forensics. He has over 26 years, proven operational experience in security, investigation, risk management, intelligence and counter terrorism. He has recently become a naturalized U.S Citizen.

Prior to the events of 9-11, Kevin was a Police Officer in the U.K, serving in a number of specialist positions and spending several years as a national instructor in multi disciplines including advanced elicitation techniques and dealing with terrorist incidents. He was commended on nine occasions including receiving a Royal Humane Society Award. He was a member of the elite Home Office National Counter Terrorism Training Team, specializing in the negotiation and resolution of hostage situations on board aircraft, ships and trains.

During his law enforcement service he was also a military reserve officer and served in many countries overseas and supported special operations training programs.

Post 9-11 he was serving in the middle east and then, in early 2002, he was activated full time into the British Military and served throughout the world as a high level intelligence briefer and foreign liaison officer. In 2003, while attached to the U.S DOD, he recruited and trained personal protection details and spearheaded HUMINT counterinsurgency and proliferation initiatives throughout Iraq including interviewing several Iraqi bomb makers.

He conducted security reviews of the Iraqi ports and assisted in the identification and recovery of Iraqi Naval IED's. Upon his return to the U.K he became the UK Government's maritime asymmetric threat expert. Then, working with the Royal Navy, he advised on maritime counter terrorism issues around the world. Kevin was instrumental in setting up the joint maritime asymmetric intelligence group and advised a number of allied nations on the threat; this included spending time in Sri- Lanka studying and advising on the LTTE.

Following a broad spectrum of training, liaison and intelligence issues, including provision of hostile environment training for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, he left the military and moved into the corporate sector in North America where highlights included recruitment, selection, training and project management of a diplomatic protective detail on behalf of the U.S Department of State, advising and appearing in a documentary series on port security, hosting an International maritime terrorism conference and managing security for major events, 'A' list talent and heads of government.

He represented and advised Fortune 100 clients, including the major film studios on risk management issues overseas has worked extensively as security advisor and protector with high net worth and celebrity clients in the Film and TV industry, regularly technically advising and providing security on overseas production shoots.

Kevin holds degrees in communications and psychology, Theater arts and professional teaching qualifications. He is a member of the British Academy of Film and Television, the British American Business Council in Los Angeles, the International Association of Bomb Technicians and Investigators, ASIS international, the International Association of Counter Terrorism and Security Professionals, the International Association of Close Protection Officers and the Project Management Institute.

To hear more about our training courses please contact Kevin by calling our main office at (727) 490-3609 or by calling him directly at (310) 906-6220. A general request for information call also be emailed to info@fieldforensics.com.

